Customer Confidence Trend:

The chart below tells us how the customer confidence score has changed over the last six months (including part months) working back from today`s date and based on the same reporting criteria. The trend line highlights the percentage of customers that were "very confident" that their next experience of using our services would be good.

In order for the trend chart to appear, there has to be at least two months within the last six months where at least one survey response was submitted.

The Customer Experience:

The chart below shows how customers rated the service for each of the paired statement slider questions in the survey. The chart illustrates the distribution of responses along with the mean or average scores for both the current as well as the previous reporting period. The length of the previous reporting period will match the length of the current reporting period. If the mean score moves to the right, the average scores during the period are improving. If the mean score has moved to the left the average scores have got worse. You can also view the additional comments made by customers with their corresponding score for each individual question displayed alongside.
